Attractive Eighties Women

ATLANTA'S BIGGEST BOOBS: These guys — yes, guys — are a crowd-pleasing, vulgarity-spouting local phenomenon. Atlantans with a twisted sense of humor will appreciate the ditties on this band's debut album, "Coup D'É Ta-Ta's," which gets its coming out party with this gig. Patrons will get a free copy of the disc with their paid admission. And what a CD it is. The sludgy hard rock lands somewhere between AC/DC and the Stooges, but it's the lyrics that hold it all together. For those with Mei Lan overload, there's the panda-cidal "Pandamonium." Then there's "Murder Kroger," which frontman Phoebe Cates — they've all taken the names of attractive '80s women, naturally — dedicates to "anyone that shops at the Kroger on Ponce." The pinnacle of the live recording, though, is what the band describes as "the best song we ever wrote." It's called "Mama, Get a Mammogram," and even if you're offended by the unprintable four-letter word in the chorus, you'll probably agree with the sentiment. With Pistolero, Bases Loaded.
